Dr. Benjamin Smith

Dr. Benjamin Smith, Adjunct Associate Professor at Nanyang Technological University (NTU), is also the Director, Future Ready Food Safety Hub (a joint initiative between A*STAR, SFA and NTU) and the A*STAR Innovations in Food and Chemical Safety Programme, Singapore Institute of Food & Biotechnology Innovation (SIFBI). As a risk assessor and toxicologist who has worked across industry, academia and government, he is a strong proponent of collaborative research and the importance of embedding safety across the entire food chain. His work at A*STAR has seen him involved in the development of 2 ecosystem wide platforms aimed at bringing together Singapore’s governmental agencies, the Institutes of Higher Learnings (IHLs) and industry partners to support Singapore’s growing food and consumer product industries. His current research interests extend across a range of different areas including gastrointestinal toxicology, dietary intake, risk-benefit frameworks and the integration of human relevant and socially responsible safety methodologies into the regulatory approval processes for new ingredients and novel foods.
